WERNER HERZOG

Werner Herzog

A unique explorer of both margins and vast expanses, Werner Herzog has established himself as one of the most breathtaking filmmakers in contemporary cinema. Through a prolific body of work, where fiction dialogues with documentary, he has carved out a unique place for himself as a tenacious interpreter of the world.

Discovered at Cannes with his early films, he has created works during the 1970s and 1980s that have become legendary – Aguirre, the Wrath of God (1972) and Fitzcarraldo (1982) – epic tales of obsession and excess, in which man reveals both their greatness and their blindness as they struggle against forces beyond their control. But beyond fiction, Herzog has never stopped exploring the real world, camera in hand. In Encounters at the End of the World (2007), he expresses his desire to approach people and their worldviews as a visitor from elsewhere, a curious and detached “alien”. It is in this deliberate distance, free of emotion, that he seeks to grasp a deeper truth, a truth about things and beings that escapes the siren-song of romanticism.

For Herzog does not believe in “nature” as an idyllic refuge. For him, jungles, ice, volcanoes and deserts are indifferent, and sometimes hostile, forces that shape and test human beings. His approach is less about contemplation than scientific expedition: relentlessly scrutinising, understanding, and questioning the flaws and fragments of human experience.

This retrospective at Premiers Plans, featuring a dozen films combining fiction and documentaries, including two new 4K restorations, Aguirre (1972) and Nosferatu the Vampyre (1979), invites audiences to explore this world of work.

NAPOLI

In attendance (to date) of Jean-Baptiste Thoret, writer and cinema historian.

Hands Over the City by Francesco Rosi

After Sicily in 2020, it is now Naples' turn to reveal itself to us through a dozen films. A city of contrasts, Naples is captured on camera as if it was open-air theatre, where tensions between misery and grandeur, light and shadow are constantly being played out. Dominated by the menacing shadow of Vesuvius, the city lives under the constant threat of a tragic fate, recalled by the ruins of Pompeii. Yet far from resigning themselves to this, Neapolitans seem to embrace this fragility with a frenetic, almost vital energy.

Founded under the Greek name of Parthenope, Naples is one of the oldest continuously inhabited cities in the world. Its legendary port, its tumultuous history – it was under Angevin rule for almost two centuries (1282-1442) – its vibrant culture, and its generous cuisine make it a unique place, an inexhaustible source of inspiration for artists. But Naples is also home to the Camorra, the local mafia that runs like a silent character through the history of the city and its cinema. From Luigi Zampa's The City Stands Trial (1952) to Gomorra (2008), adapted from Roberto Saviano's book, the Camorra is a common thread, a pervasive presence marking stories and destinies.

This tension between exuberance and angst, between beauty and chaos, has captivated many directors and actors. From the legendary Totò (born to a single working-class woman who had a relationship with the son of a marquis) to Roberto Rossellini, whose film Journey to Italy (1954) is considered a major modern work by Jacques Rivette, who admired this daring project, written day by day. Vittorio De Sica, although of noble origin, never forgot the poverty of his early years. While Bicycle Thieves (1948) and Umberto D. (1952) remain masterpieces of neorealism, it was with The Gold of Naples (1954) and Marriage Italian Style (1964) that he immortalized the tragicomic soul of the city. Through these films, Sophia Loren, who was discovered by De Sica, embodied Neapolitan beauty and resilience, becoming a global icon.

Closer to home, Paolo Sorrentino, who is from Naples, has also turned his camera on his native city. After One Man Up (2001), he returned with The Hand of God (2021), a deeply autobiographical film in which Naples becomes a central character. Other contemporary filmmakers, such as Pietro Marcello (Martin Eden, 2019), Leonardo di Costanzo (The Interval, 2012; The Intruder, 2017), Mario Martone (Nostalgia, 2022) and, more recently, Gianfranco Rosi (Below the Clouds, 2025) have explored the city from various angles, revealing its many faces.

Finally, how can we not mention the man who, in the 1980s, restored its dignity to Naples, wiping away the image of its inhabitants as people doomed to filth and degradation? Diego Maradona gave Naples an epic destiny when he joined their football club. Asif Kapadia's eponymous film (2019) traces the life of the famous Argentine footballer through numerous archives, most of which are unpublished. Through his magic on the field, Maradona changed the way the world saw the city, giving it a new, almost mythological aura.

JUDGES AND WITNESSES

In attendance (to date) of Stéphane Demoustier and Laetitia Dosch, filmmakers, Nathalie Hertzberg, screenwriter, and Jean-Baptiste Thoret, writer and cinema historian.

Anatomy of a Fall by Justine Triet

Trials and the judicial world are so closely linked to the history of cinema that they are a genre in their own right. From M (1931) to Anatomie d'une chute (Anatomy of a Fall) (2023), through La Vérité (The Truth) (1960), Procès de Jeanne d'Arc (The Trial of Joan of Arc) (1962), A Dry White Season (1989) and Il traditore (The Traitor) (2019), the courtroom has established itself as a favoured setting for the films. It has always fascinated filmmakers, raising questions of staging, and becoming the scene of intense drama where the truth of human beings is played out as much as the truth of facts.

American cinema, in particular, is full of courtroom dramas, right up to the most recent works by William Friedkin (The Caine Mutiny Court-Martial, 2023) and Clint Eastwood (Juror #2, 2024). These films borrow from the codes of thrillers and whodunits, revealing beneath the surface the hidden layers of a truth that is always in suspension. 12 Angry Men (1957), Sidney Lumet's first feature film, offers an exemplary model: the doubt expressed by a lone juror becomes a discreet but powerful tribute to the democratic vitality of American institutions.

But the legal arena can also become a dark mirror of political excesses. In Punishment Park (1971), Peter Watkins' dystopian work born out of the turmoil of the protest years (against the Vietnam War, the repression of minorities, and so on), trials are nothing more than Kafkaesque parodies, ringing out to the chilling echoes of the worst authoritarian regimes. From the 1950s to the 1970s, as America was undergoing a profound transformation, legal fiction captured the upheavals brought by this change.

Some films, such as A Dry White Season (1989), In the Name of the Father (1993) and Philadelphia (1993), are rooted in reality. They recount true stories and seek, through cinema, to heal the wounds of history. These trials become milestones of memory in tense political contexts – from apartheid South Africa through British-ruled Ireland to America grappling with the AIDS crisis. They offer a space for recognition and symbolic healing, and contribute to the social struggles that shake people's consciences.

By its very nature, the courtroom is a place of eloquence, dramatic tension, and theatricality – but it is also fertile ground for fiction, ambiguity, and doubt. Three recent French films - Une intime conviction (Conviction) (2018), La Fille au bracelet (The Girl with the Bracelet) (2019), and Anatomie d'une chute (Anatomy of a Fall) (2023) - powerfully demonstrate this. All three reject the easy option of a clear-cut resolution, instead allowing confusion to emerge, questioning the characters' morals, and inviting the viewer to become not only a witness, but also a juror.

THAT'S NOT FAIR!*In partnership with BenshiA short films programme for the whole family, recommended for ages 4 and up

Why do some people have more than others? Why is life sometimes so... unfair? Through three poetic, funny, or mischievous short films, this programme invites children to explore the feeling of injustice that can be so revolting.

Benshi offers a unique selection of animated short films that give a voice to the little ones facing the big ones, the clever ones facing the powerful ones, the dreamers facing the norms. An invitation to reflect on the world around us, to question power relations and to believe in our ability to transform them.
